1. A cover letter and a curriculum vitae (CV) serve different purposes in a job application process:
   a. Cover Letter: It is a personal Introduction that accompanies your CV. Its primary purpose is to express your interest in specific position, highlight why you are a good fit for that particular company, and provide context for your achievements. It is usually written in a narrative, persuasive format.
   b. Curriculum Vitae (CV): It is comprehensive, structured document that provides a factual summary of your professional and academic history. It details your education, work experience, skills, certifications, and accomplishments in a chronogical or functional format. While a cover letter explains who you are and why you want the job, the CV proves what you have done and what you are capable of.

2. Importance of a CV and Information to include in a CV
   a. Importance of a CV:
      - First Impression: A CV is often the first point of contact between a job seeker and a recruiter. A well-organized CV demonstrates professionalism and attention to detail.
      - Marketing Tool: It serves as a personal marketing document that highlights a candidate's value proposition and convinces the employer that they are worth an interview.
      - Screening Criteria: Recruiters use the CV to quickly screen candidates against the specific requirements of a job description to determine if they are qualified.

   b. Information to include in a CV:
      - Contact Information: Full name, Phone Number, Professional email address, and Linkedln profile (optional).
      - Professional Summary/objective: A brief statement outlining your professional goals and key qualification.
      - Work Experience: A reverse-chronological list of your previous jobs, including job titles, company name, dates of employment, and responsibilities/achievements.
      - Education: Details of your academic background, including degrees earned, institution names, and graduation years.
      -Skills: A list of relevan technical skill and interpersonal abilities such as communication, leadership, or specific software proficiency.
      - Certifications/Awards: Any professional licenses, certifications, or awards that strengthen your candidacy.
